

Annual Event Dons New Hat for International Women's Day

A new tradition in Lincoln and Lancaster County is about to begin.

For the first time in its history, the Lincoln-Lancaster Women's Commission, along with Friends of the Commission, will host a luncheon program for its annual awards presentation.

In recognition of International Women's Day, the 27th annual awards program, "Weaving Women's Voices," is scheduled for Friday, March 7, 2003, at the Cornhusker Hotel. This event differs from previous years as the Commission has traditionally held evening programs to honor recipients of the Alice Paul, Erasmus Correll, Woman Artist and the Young Feminist of the Year awards.

"We are looking forward to having our first luncheon program to make it more accessible for those who support our endeavors," said Bonnie Coffey, director of the Lincoln-Lancaster Women's Commission.

The two-hour program, starting at 11:30 a.m., will highlight outstanding women and men who have made an impact professionally and personally in the community on women's issues. Tickets are $25 per person. Menu choices include Caesar salad, vegetables and pasta, and quiche.

Hosted by the Commission's nonprofit organization, Friends of the Lincoln-Lancaster Women's Commission, a fundraiser will be conducted to raffle a homemade quilt and tapestry, created by Wendy Weiss, woven with quotes from women. Proceeds will support the Commission's events and programs. Raffle ticket sales and program RSVP can be arranged by calling the Women's Commission, 441-7716.

The keynote speaker will be Dr. Preeta Bansal, a visiting professor at the University of Nebraska College of Law. Bansal, an Lincoln East High School valedictorian alumna who was born in India and immigrated with her family to Lincoln at the age of three, is a magna cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Harvard-Radcliffe College.

She has argued cases before the United States Supreme Court, serving as Solicitor General for the State of New York and has been referred to by The New York Times as a "legal superstar" and "one of the most gifted lawyers of her generation."

She served as law clerk to several Supreme Court Justices and participated in drafting the "New Federalism" guidelines for the role of government and attorney generals nationwide.

Among her many travels, she went to India under the direction of former President Jimmy Carter to oversee India's national elections.

She served in the Clinton Administration as counselor in the U.S. Department of Justice and as Special Counsel in the Office of the White House Counsel, where she focused on issues relating to youth violence and violence against women, and coordinated the United States' agenda for the United Nations Conference on Women in Beijing.

Bansal has been a regular speaker and lecturer on constitutional law issues in the United States and abroad, and has authored and co-authored pieces published in the Harvard Law Review, Yale Law Journal, and Villanova Law Review, among other publications. In 1993, she traveled to India at the request of the U.S. Embassy in New Delhi to speak on intellectual property law issues, and in 1996, she traveled to Uganda at the request of the former U.S. Registrar for Copyrights to assist in drafting of that nation's copyright laws.

She also is active in numerous community and social service activities. She volunteers at the soup kitchen, served as a life skills mentor to inner New York City children, and served on national boards of several nonprofit organizations.

Female Athletes Honored at 7th Annual Luncheon

Six top female athletes and more than 50 Athletic Achievers have been slated for recognition at the 7th annual awards luncheon hosted by Girls & Women in Sports & Fitness (GWISF).

Held in honor of the national Women in Sports Week celebrated Feb. 1 through 7, 2003, the awards luncheon theme, "Succeed in Sport - Lead in Life," will be held at the University of Nebraska Student Union, 14 and R Streets on Saturday, Feb. 1, 2003. Congratulations to the following winners:

Ambassador Award - Debbie Sedlacek

Courage Award - Abby Meyer

Pioneer Award - Doris O'Donnell

Mentor Award - Kristi Nelson-Hitz

Youth Award - Leigh Sutton

Spirit Award - Kristin Carney

Starting at 11:30 a.m., the awards luncheon will feature keynote speaker Athena Yiamouyiannis, executive director for the National Association for Girls and Women in Sports (NAGWS). Working in the field of advocating and lobbying for Title IX, she is dedicated to promoting gender equality on and off the playing field.

Reservations can be made through January 28. Tickets can be purchased by contacting Vicki Highstreet, UNL Campus Rec, 472-4771.

Being a serious "shagger" for the Nebraska Men's Basketball team doesn't steal time away from Abby Meyer's other interests, such as taking private tennis and piano lessons or playing percussion in the Lux Middle School's jazz band. The honor roll student is seen as an excellent role model in gym class and her mentors agree that she never gives up - regardless of how painful it is. Meyer, who was born with missing fingers on her hands, wears a prosthesis on the right leg and a brace on the left. Her parents, Lisa and Rick Meyer, look at their daughter as a heroine because of her day-to-day courage in facing the uphill climb to success.

Kristin Carney understands the meaning of pain, physically and emotionally. The Waverly High School senior suffered a severe knee injury in her junior year during an indoor soccer game. Extensive surgery and hours of painful rehabilitation were necessary to get her back into shape and return to the field for one more year. Although Carney remained close to her supportive parents, they were employed in different states and couldn't be accessible on a daily basis. But Carney had real athletic spirit and was determined to pursue her goals. Her comeback resulted in setting seven new school records, winning the Eastern Midlands Conference and becoming the medalist at the state meet for Class B and setting a new all-class 18-hole score record with a round of 72.

GWISF Awards Program Set for February

Goals keep Debbie Sedlacek focused on her job of molding and instructing women and girls in the sport of Dressage - a particular equestrian riding technique where the horse and the rider become one in thought and movement. Sedlacek, a Nebraska Dressage Association Board member and Madonna volunteer, provides equestrian opportunities in recreational events, Cornhusker State Games, and other competitive meets for women of all ages. She is an excellent ambassador, who remains focused and compassionate, respecting each rider's hardworking efforts and developing them into full potential.

Lincoln High School Coach Kristi Nelson-Hitz is an excellent mentor with female athletes. Recently completing her 13th year as head volleyball coach, she has compiled more than 200 wins, her teams have finished seasons ranked in the top ten seven times, and had 25 all-conference players and 12 all-state honorees. Winning teams and excellent female athletes come from outstanding coaching, and Nelson-Hitz motivates her students to exceed self-imposed limitations. She helps her students understand the relationship between succeeding on the court and succeeding in life. Her dedication to fitness combined with the ability to connect with youth makes her an exceptional and supportive coach.

As a member of the Sutton, an honor roll "Outstanding Sophomore shown considerable her game on the fairway. Honors each year and top 5 at every competition, competitions. Selected as Association's Girl Junior she heads up a winning list of achievements as a Star City youth athlete.

Conversely, Doris O'Donnell has been professionally and personally active in sports most of her life. The Professor Emeritus at the University of Nebraska taught physical education and coached field hockey and women's basketball during the time when our society was trying to define women's role in sports, leadership, teamwork, and athletic success. O'Donnell was a pioneer who blazed the trail for other women moving into the coaching and teaching arenas during the mid 1970's when Title IX was a passing thought. She naturally became a role model and mentor to many women who made sports a profession.

She has served as an advisor and spokesperson about equity issues on and off the playing fields for colleges, universities, conferences and national organizations. She has addressed the NCAA Coaches Education Summit, NYLC Title IX Debates, NACWAA Fall Forum, Southern Association for Women in Physical Activity and Sport Convention, Bush Administration's Chicago Title IX Hearing, Mt. Holyoke College and Equity in Sport Symposium.

Prior to NAGWS, Athena worked for ten years at the National Collegiate Athletics Association (NCAA) as its director of membership services. She also supervised the NCAA rules, education program and served as liaison to the NCAA's Committee on Women's Athletics.

physical educators dedicated to increasing opportunities for girls and women in sport.

Ms. Yiamouyiannis holds a master's degree in sports management and a bachelor's degree in mathematics from Ohio State University.

She competed in varsity cross country and track for the Buckeyes. Athletics achievements include varsity basketball, cross country and track at Olentangy High School - State Champions in cross country. Her own best time for the mile run was 5:03 minutes.

She placed first in her age category in the Ohio Championship Triathlon (1.2 mile swim, 40 mile bike, 9 mile run) and bicycled up the east coast from St. Augustine, Fla., to Washington DC in 2001.

Last year, she took the final plunge and bungee-jumped for the first time in her life.

International Women's Day Founded Nearly a Century Ago in Germany

Around the world, International Women's Day (IWD) marks a celebration of the economic, social, cultural and political achievements for women.

An international celebration of education and empowerment, the first IWD was held on March 19, 1911 in Germany, Austria, Denmark and other European countries. German women selected this date in observation of the Prussian king in 1848 who had promised the vote to women. Subsequently over one million leaflets calling for action on the right to vote were distributed throughout Germany before IWD in 1911.

Now, IWD is always celebrated on March 8th and it's an occasion marked by women's groups around the world. This date is also commemorated at the United Nations and is designated in many countries as a national holiday. Women in every country, often divided by ethnic, linguistic, cultural, economic and political differences, come together to celebrate this important date that represents equality, justice, peace and development.

International Women's Day is the story of ordinary women as makers of history; it is rooted in the centuries-old struggle of women seeking to participate equally in society on an equal footing with men. In ancient Greece, Lysistrata initiated a sexual strike against men in order to end war; during the French Revolution, Parisian women calling for "liberty, equality, fraternity" marched on Versailles to demand women's suffrage.

The idea of an International Women's Day first arose at the turn of the century, which in the industrialized world was a period of expansion and turbulence, booming population growth and radical ideologies. Until women are fully represented at senior leadership levels of public, professional and economic life, women do not have equal rights nor an equal voice.

The growing international women's movement has helped make IWD a special day for promoting women's rights and participation in political and economic processes. Increasingly, International Women's Day is a time to reflect on the progress made, to call for change and to celebrate acts of courage and determination by ordinary women who have played an extraordinary role in the history of women's rights.

Speak Up and Bust Sexual Assault Myths

For as many advancements as our culture has made in the areas of technology, science, medicine and human behavior, it's difficult to believe that society still harbors old myths that taint the perceptions of human sexuality.

Myth: Rape really doesn't happen very often. There are very few women who have experienced sexual assault.

Truth: The Federal Bureau of Investigation states that rape is the "fastest growing violent crime" in the nation. The FBI also estimated that the actual number of sexual assaults is 10 to 1000 times more than the number of reported sexual assaults.

According to the FBI's Crime Clock, one forcible rape occurred every 5.8 minutes and one is six U.S. women have been victims of a completed or attempted rape. Nearly 28% of all rapes are committed by boyfriends, 35% by acquaintances, and 5% by other relatives. Strangers are responsible for one in five rapes.

What does this really mean? The next time you find yourself conversing about sexual assault stories at a party, family gathering or near the office coffee pot, speak up. It's never too late to be a myth-buster. The person you tell might end up as a juror on a sexual assault case someday.

The History Behind February's Black History Month

Americans have recognized black history annually since 1926, first as "Negro History Week" and later as "Black History Month." Black history was in the early stages of documentation and study when the tradition was born. Although Blacks have been in America at least as far back as colonial times, it was not until the 20th century that they gained a respectable presence in the history books. The celebration of Black History Month, and more importantly, the study of black history is the work of Dr. Carter G. Woodson.

Born to parents who were former slaves, he spent his childhood working in the Kentucky coal mines and enrolled in high school at age twenty. He graduated within two years and later went on to earn a Ph.D. from Harvard. The scholar was disturbed to find in his studies that history books largely ignored the Black American population.

Woodson decided to take on the challenge of writing Black Americans into the nation's history. He established the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History (now called the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History) in 1915, and a year later founded the widely respected Journal of Negro History. In 1926, he launched Negro History Week as an initiative to bring national attention to the contributions of Black people throughout American history.

Business and the Working Woman

Executive Women's Behavior Changes Up the Career Ladder

According to The Leader's Edge Research (TM) team who recently conducted a nationwide study of Fortune 500 company executives to develop a profile of senior executive women, women's professional behaviors seem to change once on top of the career ladder.

The purpose of the research was to determine the styles and strategies of the most successful women in business and to see how they contrast with senior executive men, as well as more junior executives.

"What emerged from the study was a compelling portrait which reveals striking behavioral differences with male counterparts and more junior women in a number of key areas including networking, self-promotion and communication style," according to Molly Shepard, founder of The Leader's Edge firm. "The research shows that the senior executive women are less assertive, more formal, and more risk averse than their male counterparts and more junior executives. They network less, are more dependent on promotion from within their company; and under-utilized their mentors, using them for protection rather than for obtaining top assignments."

The sample consisted of 341 executives with salaries of $100,000 and above who were contacted through direct mail and email. The research indicates that senior executive women do not make effective use of networking to advance their careers.

While networking skills increase in importance for males, they decrease for women as they move up the ladder, with only 65.9% of senior executive woman versus 75.3% of senior executive men rating networking skills as important.

Although self-promotion skills are reported as important factors by 72.6% of the more junior females, they decrease significantly to 50% for women at the highest levels, suggesting that women may not be taking advantage of self-promotion as they rise in an organization.

While women at all levels have a less assertive communication style in meetings than men, women are dramatically less confrontational at the highest levels. Only 69.4% of senior women versus 82.4% of senior men responded that they "like to challenge thinking." Women may feel "at risk" and therefore temper assertiveness as they are promoted.

The importance of reputation increases for senior executive women and is significantly higher than for their male counterparts. Over 95% of the most senior women cite reputation as an important factor in reaching their current position, which would indicate that they are less likely to take risks which may prove damaging.

A large percentage (79.4%) of women at the highest level utilized mentors as protective allies, rather than actively using them for help in obtaining assignments and gaining visibility. This implies a possible underutilization of mentors by high level women.

Recognition is consistently more important for women than for men and the importance of this factor increases to 81.4% in the highest level women, suggesting that career success is gauged less by money and promotion and more by how they are perceived.

As they rise in the organization, women become increasingly reliant on formal meetings for influencing senior management (15.3% for more junior women versus 28.4%), indicating that they rely on scheduled meetings with superiors, rather than informal interactions on or off the job.

Women at all levels were much more dependent on promotion from within the company than are men, with the largest contrast between top men (35.1%) and top women (51.8%). This tendency for some women to stay with their current companies to get ahead correlates with less active use of networking and mentoring.

Be Your Own Boss

The Lincoln-Lancaster Women's Commission television show, WomenTalk, will focus on women business owners during the months of February and March. Special guests for this program, Be Your Own Boss: Starting A Business, includes Sarah Gauger, co-owner of One More Time Clothing and Sarah's Bridal Shop, and Bonnie Ehlert, owner of Good Memories.

Gauger has operated the consignment shop at 1725 Van Dorn for more than two decades with her mother, Jan Gauger. Ehlert started a new business last year in the Piedmont Shopping Center on South Cotner Blvd.

LLWC Commissioner Nancy Intermill joins LLWC Director Bonnie Coffey in co-moderating this special show designed to inform women on the skills needed to become an entrepreneur.

Celebrate Women's History Month

Know of any "good" women to talk about during the month of March? Women who made scientific discoveries? Created fair laws? Started million-dollar companies? Changed the way employers treated factory workers during the depression? Or flew to the moon?

If so, start talking. Others need to know.

March is that time of year set aside to celebrate women's achievements in the home, school and workplace. Libraries set up book displays dedicated to women authors. Teachers assign research papers on women inventors and engineers. Service clubs host guest speakers to share stories about women's impact on society. The community is busy with a wide variety of activities designed to bring awareness to women's role in history.

Plan an activity with your family and friends. Watch "Norma Rae," a true story starring Sally Fields and directed by Penny Marshal. Volunteer to be a reader for a children's story hour at the local bookstore and highlight famous women. Watch Oxygen on cable television, a station devoted to women. Participate in a genealogy research project and call family members to glean new stories about your female ancestors.

Whatever the activity, celebrate Women's History Month!

President's Letter

By Dr. Mary Beck, LLWC President

As an advisory board, the Lincoln-Lancaster Women's Commission seeks to keep its hand on the pulse of 51% of the population - the women in Lincoln and Lancaster County. Not an easy task with fifteen volunteer commissioners and a staff of only three.

This year, one of our more significant projects was Women's Voices: Finding Solutions. Based on a similar model from the New Mexico Commission on the Status of Women, a questionnaire was adapted and distributed in the community; in addition to English, the questionnaire was also distributed in Spanish, Arabic, and Vietnamese versions. Contacts in the various communities helped with the distribution of over 4,500 of these questionnaires in Lincoln and Lancaster County and we received a respectable 13.5% return rate.

What we discovered through these Women's Voices was, if not surprising, certainly confirming. The overwhelming concern of women in our community who responded is health care – more specifically, the cost of health care. Issues of employment (inadequate wages is a dominant theme) and childcare (expense is the primary concern) closely follow the health care issue.

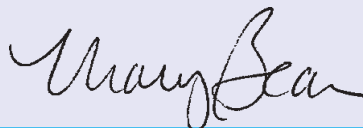

One of the more interesting sections of the final report issued in January contains written comments women offered on the questionnaires. These personal vignettes give substance to the report, and help to place a very human face on the numbers collected. Every comment provided by participating women is included in the final report.

Women's Voices does not offer plans or solutions to address the concerns these women have; our resources and finances preclude that. The final report does, however, reconfirm the lingering fact that events and economic realities continue to disproportionately and adversely impact women. It indicates, for example, a looming increased dependency on the Lincoln-Lancaster County Health Department for pressing health needs that are not elsewhere funded through health insurance. The very real possibility exists that many women will not seek health care for their own needs or those of their children because it is economically impossible for them.

What will these decisions portend? Will health conditions become so pressing that they are forced to seek emergency care for which they will never be able to pay? Will their children be disadvantaged by health conditions that go untreated?

The results printed in the final report of Women's Voices warrant review and attention.

These women's voices should not go unheard, nor should we – having heard them – fail to seek solutions.

Survey Results Show What Concerns Women the Most

Recently released, the Women's Voices: Finding Solutions comprehensive special report indicates the major concern for most of the women in the community is health care. The yearlong survey was conducted by the Lincoln-Lancaster Women's Commission in response to its mandate to keep elected officials informed on issues impacting women.

In summary, the respondent was a middle-aged, white, married professional who had some college education, worked full time and resided in southeast Lincoln. There were 796 women who participated in the yearlong study and voted for "what concerned" them the most. Many of them also added written comments relative to the issues at hand.

The majority of Women's Voices (69%) indicated that health care costs (39%) was a major concern for them and their families. From prescription drugs to medical visits to monthly premium payments and larger co-pays with less policy coverage, concerns about insurance coverage ranked second (27%) from the top. The demographic study showed that 72% of the women were covered by some type of insurance plan with the majority being employer related. Conversely and sadly, seven percent indicated they had no insurance coverage and couldn't afford satisfactory health care. Four percent of children also had no health insurance coverage.

Domestic violence remains a top priority concern according to Women's Voices (58%) respondents who felt emotional abuse (27%), child abuse (26%) and physical abuse (24%) lacked the necessary support systems (shelters, funding and programs) needed to educate, reform and promote a safer living environment within our community.

Another major concern among Lincoln and Lancaster County women was employment and wages. The vast majority of voices (57%) agreed that wages are too low (42%) and underemployment is a real problem. With regards to quality jobs, Lincoln doesn't compare well to other markets in other states. Many hurdles exist for the single parent and low-income parents who must hold two or more jobs in order to meet their monthly financial obligations and cost of living needs. Some women indicated they lacked the necessary education level or skills required (8%) to move up the economic ladder.

Education is a priority concern (54%) as women indicated the cost (27%) and quality (23%) of the education as a barrier to completing goals. Some women stated that getting a higher education was a privilege only for the wealthy while others lamented over their child's homework assignments conflicting parent's work schedules, outside family activities, and other responsibilities.

Not surprisingly, Women's Voices tied with regards to family and housing (52%) issues.

Affordability (41%) and quality (16%) of housing are two major concerns. Under current economics and credit rating systems, home ownership is either very difficult or not an option if you are a single parent and/or of low income. Those women who can afford to own a home indicated the high cost of taxes, maintenance and utilities consumed too much of their monthly budget, putting a financial stressor on their pocketbooks.

Parenting issues, relationship-building and community activities are of moderate concern to many women. Single parenting (20%) support and a need for youth activities (18%) reflect a lack of community support systems and partnership programs.

Discrimination and child care tied (51%) as moderate concerns.

Many women indicated that they deal with some form of discrimination in their daily lives, ranging from obesity to hate crimes to age to religion. The two highest issues were sexism (25%) and racism (23%).

Child care issues, including cost (30%) and quality (28%), remain a constant concern with working mothers. Nebraska's working mothers ranked second in the nation as the largest female workforce with children living in the household in 2000.

Items ranked of marginal concern, but of great importance, were substance abuse (40%), sexual assault (34%) and transportation (29%).

Drugs (26%) and alcohol (22%) abuse issues continue to be a challenge faced by family members, young adults and public health systems. There is no or little assistance available to the uninsured, and some women believe that the "college-town atmosphere" allows such abuses to be socially acceptable.

Sexual harassment (19%) and rape (13%) incidents were named as the two top concerns of sexual assault issues. Difficulty in reporting the crime, going to court and getting a conviction continues to be the major hurdle in thwarting the number of sexual assault incidents occurring in the community.

Women's Voices indicated the lack of adequate public transit system (16%) affected their mobility in accessing employment, education and health care resources.
